A foster care story of hope and healing set in the Street Art world of Venice Beach, California that celebrates the beauty of broken lives redeemed.

FILM SYNOPSIS

Receiving news that his mother is ill, Max Rollins (late 40s) returns from the reclusiveness of a small Mexican fishing village to the Venice Beach, California home where he was raised. Having been fostered since early childhood and finally adopted as a troubled youth by Judy Rollins, Max and his younger brother (also adopted,) Jonah (late 20s) are now challenged with the reality of their mother's health crisis. Her abrupt passing sets in motion a journey of discovery for the patchwork family that is left behind. Along the way, wounds are faced and long buried pain is worked through. In this unforeseen season of life, both Max and Jonah must rise to the occasion as they take on new responsibilities neither feel equipped for. Honoring Judy's legacy, not only involves rescuing her fledgling Art Youth Center but also taking on the permanent guardianship of Levi (10,) a placement who is navigating trauma of his own. Abandonment being a major theme in their lives, the boys struggle to accept and offer the unconditional love that Judy instilled, eventually finding reconciliation and healing as they selflessly acknowledge and walk in the truth of their mom's life motto, "We are our brothers' keepers."
